

Honeywood powers on as floods pass by

This high and dry estate has just released new land

THE Honeywood Estate in Fernvale was lucky to be spared from the recent flooding affecting south-east Queensland earlier this year.

Being fortunate enough to be left high and dry from the rising waters has meant little disruption to both sales and construction of one of the region's most affordable estates.

The Honeywood Estate has just announced that the latest release is ready to build on and open for inspection.

This new release features elevated land on tree-lined streets with northerly aspects to the D'Aguilar Ranges.

All home sites are fully serviced with full pressure town water, underground power and sewers.

Home sites are flat as the developer has fully benched most lots and supplied high quality concrete retaining walls.

Providing level home sites saves buyers thousands when it comes to the cost of building their new home.

The Honeywood Estate boasts more than 120 completed homes and another 25 under construction, with more in planning.

Residents of the estate are drawn to the relaxed lifestyle and natural amenities of the area such as the Brisbane River, Wivenhoe Dam and a number of national parks that feature great picnic spots, and canoe and walking trails.

The array of quality homes now built in the estate has raised the benchmark for many of the other estates in the area, and means it is also a safe and sound investment in years to come.

Honeywood is located 50 minutes from Brisbane and less than 20 minutes to the Ipswich CBD, making this the ideal location to relax and unwind away from the city but still use city conveniences when required.

Travel times will no doubt be shortened when improvements to the Ipswich Motorway and those mentioned for the Warrego Highway are completed.

Considering the pressures of the ever-rising cost of living, the estate presents a significant opportunity for families to have a smaller mortgage for a new home on a minimum 600sq m block.

The Honeywood estate can still offer land from $127,000, with house and land packages starting from an affordable $285,000 with full turn key options starting in the low $300,000s.
